

A blind man was walking along the road one night, carrying an oil can on his head and holding a lantern in his hand.
Seeing him, a passerby asked in surprise:
“Hey brother, you cannot see, can you? Whether it is night or day, what difference does it make to you? Then why are you carrying this lantern?”
The blind man calmly replied:
“This lantern is not for me, brother — it is for you. Without light, when you walk in the darkness, you too are blind. In this darkness, if you bump into me, won’t the oil can on my head fall down and cause me a loss?”
In reality, any object becomes visible to us only when light falls on it and reflects into our eyes. Scientists say that there are many black holes in the sky (outer space). Since they absorb light itself, they are not visible to us or even to telescopes.

Moral:
Our actions do not always have to benefit only ourselves. Sometimes the good we do becomes a guiding light for others.
Likewise, without light, everyone is blind , knowledge and understanding are the true light of our lives.
